

A group of five men are captured in a dynamic, synchronized dance pose within a brightly lit office hallway. They are all leaning forward, with their arms extended and legs kicked out, creating a sense of movement and energy. The man on the far left wears a patterned short-sleeved shirt and dark pants. The man next to him wears a white long-sleeved shirt, glasses, and a wide smile. The man in the center is also in a white long-sleeved shirt, leaning forward with his arms out. The man to his right is in a white long-sleeved shirt, looking towards the camera with a slight smile. The man on the far right is wearing a blue denim shirt and dark pants, leaning forward with his arms out. The hallway has a white ceiling with recessed lighting and a concrete floor. A large potted plant is visible on the right side of the hallway.

Turn employees into teams

Change Driver

An international fashion group is faced with the challenge of facilitating smooth communication between employees from various departments (design, production, logistics) and external service providers across global locations. Until now, this has resulted in high email volumes and delays in projects. Documents could not simply be filed, shared and viewed. The cooperation was described as cumbersome and error-prone. The different work locations also resulted in employees working in silos. A sense of togetherness and team spirit within the departments was missing.

Damovo Approach

Damovo has introduced a Cisco Unified Communication solution based on Webex to the company, replacing the old telephony system.

Thanks to Cisco Webex, employees can now exchange information easily and smoothly both internally and with external service providers.

Video conferencing is now possible and can be used both from mobile devices and from the desktop with just a few clicks.

Collaboration is also strengthened by the use of interactive whiteboards. Notes and information can be quickly captured and shared in real-time.
